

CLINTON COMMUNITY COLLEGE- students are resurrecting the College Newspaper. There has not been a CCC newspaper in nearly 5 years. On Wednesday, Sept. 17th, the first meeting of the college newspaper was held.

Both students in the Journalism Program and students with other majors, participated in the birth of the Clinton Chronicle. Students voted on several names, and Clinton Chronicle won the majority.

There were approximately 20 students who attended the meeting. “The turn out was very successful, “ said Wendy, one of the 2 elected Editors of the newspaper.

The meeting took place in Rm. 330m, where all subsequent meetings will take place, for anyone still interested in participating in the group.

“I have had difficulties in finding relevant information concerning student activities and such, and it’s a very good idea to start Clinton Chronicle,” Sarah Slator a CCC student said during the meeting,

Many ideas were exchanged on how to serve CCC students with the newspaper’s content. If anyone has any ideas, it is never too late to make your contribution. Several students will be taking photos for the newspaper. Other students will be writing articles relevant to the community as well as issues that affect CCC students.

There will be an opinion column, an editorial page, as well as other traditional formats and features newspapers include.

Overall, the success of the newspaper depends on the willingness to set aside time each week from the members, to assist in the growth of the newspaper. Judging from the turn out and the participation of the group, there was little doubt that everyone is interested in making it a success now and in the future.
